Contents	This course is concerned with the changing relationship between politics, economy, work and labor, (tertiary) education and international relations. It draws upon theory as well as the experience that students bring to the analysis. The impact of globalization (from above and below) on these relationships and on our own practice and individual lives will be specifically addressed. Thus, students are encouraged to analyze how it is manifest in their own lives and is exemplified locally. At the same time, students are introduced to tools and concepts for effective (intercultural) communication and conflict management. Furthermore, the course includes guided tours to relevant places and sites, e.g. Berlin, Hansemuseum. All topics are subject to current developments
